POLICY OF THE OFFICE OF ACADEMIC AFFAIRS ON TEACHING LOADS

1. Normal Teaching Load. The normal teaching load for full-time, non-adjunct faculty is two courses (or the equivalent) per semester. Adjunct faculty normally teach five courses per year. There are two kinds of established exceptions:

   a. In some departments the customary teaching load may be greater than two courses per semester because of a significant number of studio or other special courses. The overall workload should be comparable to that in departments where two courses per semester are taught.

   b. In some departments the customary teaching load may be fewer than two courses per semester because their faculty members have additional responsibilities, such as the generation of research grants or the management of a graduate research lab. If individual faculty members do not bear such additional responsibilities, their course load will be adjusted accordingly. The overall workload should be comparable to that in departments where two courses per semester are taught. The academic deans will review the practices of departments in their divisions and establish appropriate policies and guidelines for the division.

2. Deployment of Faculty. Department and program chairs should monitor teaching assignments and deploy faculty members to areas where teaching strength is needed. Courses that tend to enroll fewer than five students should be offered only as frequently as is required by the structure of the major. Except by special arrangement, courses with fewer than five students will not be credited to the instructor’s teaching load, and the instructor will be expected to make up the deficit in a later semester. Departments and programs with few majors should balance their offerings to attract significant numbers of non-majors.

3. Special Types of Courses. In the interests of equity among faculty members, the vice president for academic affairs (VPAA) will monitor three instructional practices: the teaching of courses with fewer than five students; team-taught courses where each instructor takes a full teaching credit; and courses for which an individual instructor receives more than one teaching credit. Departments or instructors should apply to the VPAA if they wish to establish that an existing or a proposed course might properly follow one of these practices.

a. Special arrangements may be made for courses with fewer than five students that must be offered in order to sustain the major, a graduate program, or for other compelling reasons. Without such special arrangement, a course with an enrollment of fewer than five students should be turned into a tutorial.

b. Team-taught courses that have been approved according to the Policy on Team-Taught Courses, will normally carry a total of one teaching credit for each instructor.

c. Except by special arrangement with the Office of Academic Affairs, very large courses will carry only one teaching credit for their instructor. Instructors of such courses may apply for extra resources for graders to reduce their burden.

4. Responses to Discrepancies. Immediately following the end of the drop/add period each semester, the academic deans and the VPAA examine the courses and enrollments for faculty in all departments and programs. If they find reductions in the teaching responsibilities of individual faculty that cannot be accounted for by the approved departmental norm or by leaves or teaching reductions approved by Academic Affairs, they will follow up with the chair to see how the deficit can be made up in a later semester.

5. Course Relief. Course relief is granted for a heavy burden of service on a committee or as chair of a department or program. A heavy burden of service is defined as one comparable in its time demands, over the course of a year, to the time required to teach a semester course.

Course relief is expressed as a fraction of a faculty member’s nominal teaching load (e.g., .25). It is expected that course relief will be taken during the period of the burden that led to the relief. Course relief may be "banked" and used later in two kinds of circumstances:

a) If a last-minute assignment makes it difficult to take course relief in a timely fashion, a faculty member may apply to the vice president for academic affairs for permission to "bank" the relief.
b) Course relief amounting to a fraction of a course may be routinely "banked" until enough has accumulated to be used.

Course relief "banked" for either reason should be taken as soon as possible. "Banked" course relief must be used prior to the faculty member’s next sabbatical; it may not be carried over and used in the subsequent sabbatical cycle. In no case shall course relief for duties as chair or on committees result in a faculty member having a semester of service with no assigned courses.

Where judgments are to be made on special cases the vice president for academic affairs will make them, acting in consultation with the academic deans and the chair(s) of the relevant department(s) or programs.

a. Course Relief for Committee Service

Course relief of .25 is awarded to all members of the Advisory Committee and to the chair of the Educational Policy Committee. Other faculty members whose assignments on committees and task forces appear to constitute a "heavy burden of service" in the sense given above may apply to the VPAA for course relief.

Committee chairs should limit the amount of work assigned to untenured faculty. Untenured faculty members whose overall burden of service for the University and their department becomes excessive may apply to the VPAA for exemption from further committee service for a time.

Faculty members who have served for two consecutive years on standing committees, the Advisory Committee, or as vice-chair/chair of the faculty, may be excused from nomination to these committees, and the offices of vice-chair and chair of the faculty for a period of three years after said service. Those serving for three full years may be excused from nomination as above for four years. These “immunity” periods are intended to be in addition to (not concurrent with) the immunity from committee service permitted to department chairs.

b. Course Relief for Service as Chair of a Department or Program

The vice president for academic affairs maintains a table of course relief allotted to department and program chairs. In general, course relief for chairs is determined with a view to the number of faculty in the department or program, the number of majors, the number of courses mounted, the complexity of the department or program, and similar factors, including whether there are auxiliary programs administered from the departmental or program office. Course relief for a chair may not exceed one-half of the nominal teaching load of the department.

Additional course relief may on occasion be granted to a chair who incurs a special burden of work: for instance, a review of the department or program, or an unusual number of searches or tenure cases. Application should be made to the VPAA.

6. Policy on Outside Work. Before a faculty member undertakes substantial commitments in addition to his/her Wesleyan responsibilities during the academic year, he/she should consult with the chair of the department and, through the academic dean, with the VPAA. Their explicit approval is required for outside commitments that make substantial demands upon the time and energy of a faculty member.

The circumstances of appointment are sufficiently favorable that the University feels justified in emphasizing that off-campus activities should not make major inroads on time and energy.
